David Stillman
Co-founder and Partner
BridgeWorks, LLC

David A. Stillman is co-founder, with business partner Lynne Lancaster, of BridgeWorks, a company dedicated to speaking, writing and consulting on generational issues in the workplace and the marketplace. David and Lynne are the rare combination of an entrepreneurial Generation Xer and a classic Baby Boomer who demonstrate the sometimes frustrating, often hilarious, and always thought-provoking challenges of communicating between generations.

David is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin at Madison with B.A. degrees in Communications and Sociology. Following completion of the Michigan State University Mass Media in Britain program, in association with the BBC, he worked for ABC television in New York City as an intern for Prime Time Live. David then embarked on a round-the-world trip that included stints as a roving reporter for CBS radio covering such topics as the end of apartheid in South Africa and the fall of the former Soviet Union. Upon his return to the United States, David's creative communications work earned him numerous accolades including medals at the NY Film Festival and the much coveted CLIO Award.

David's keynote speeches and workshops on generational issues in the workplace and the marketplace have received rave reviews from client companies and associations nationwide. In addition to speaking, David is co-author, with Lynne Lancaster, of the lively, entertaining and savvy best-seller When Generations Collide: Who They Are. Why They Clash. How to Solve the Generational Puzzle at Work (HarperBusiness, 2002). He and Lynne have been featured in TIME magazine and appeared as guests on CNN, CNBC and numerous local TV and radio programs. David recently launched the corporate entertainment production, David Stillman Time Four--a one-man show in which he plays four generations of characters. It's full of hilarious bits and audience interaction, highly customized and solid, relevant content.
